Summary

I summarize myself as being ethically honest. I avoid dishonesty and I do my absolute best to be honest to myself and to others around me, I refuse to lie to protect myself and others from the consequences of my mistakes, and will give honest work for my pay. My learning style is best fit with learning-on-the-job, and doing the work. When I learn I learn deep. I ask the why questions to the problems, so as a result I may not be the fastest at learning what is taught to me in class, and I will ask for a lot of help for the things I don't understand, but I walk away with a deeper understanding of what I learn. My own personal experience with myself has proven that I will always become better than average at what I do. This is because I invest myself, I strive to live up to the expectation my bosses have of me, it bothers me if I don't. My personality doesn't allow me to be satisfied with mediocre.

Experience

Journeyman/Foreman Caulker at Waterproofing West

December 1998 - July 2015 (16 years 8 months)

It was required of me to be responsible for the scope of work that our company had a contract for and be responsible for any other crew that worked under me. As a foreman I made daily (or more often) contact with the general contractor and my superiors to make sure there was clear communication. I attended meetings when required of me and made sure the work was done safely. I set goals for myself and crew to make sure that contracts were done on time and I made sure that the quality of work was acceptable to the architect and owners. If it wasn't, I owned it and fixed the problem. I was always there for others on my crew to be helpful and share knowledge about the trade so the work can go forward quickly with high quality. It makes everyone happy.
